Queering Food Sovereignty

This workshop aims to explore the intersection of food sovereignty and queer perspectives. As we navigate the intricate relationship between identity, power, and the food system, we will delve into how queerness can reshape and challenge traditional narratives surrounding food production, distribution, and consumption. Drawing from diverse experiences and expertise, this workshop aims to foster a space for dialogue, understanding, and innovation. Gain a deeper understanding of the role of queerness in shaping food systems, and discover how we can collectively contribute to a more inclusive and sustainable future for our global community

Speaker Bio: Luz Cruz is a queer, trans Afro-indigenous farmer, writer, and activist who organizes around the issues of gender, race, and food.
